HARDSHIPS OF WAR

The two marines were comparing notes. "It was at Guam; Tarawa, and a few other places," said one. "What you been doing?" "I just came back from Okinawa," replied the other. "Yeah?" commented the first, sympathetically. "It must have been terrible." "It was," replied the other calmly. "It rained every day." — Christian Science Monitor.

TOO LATE TO CLASSIFY

By Russell Klay

Saturday, August 4, marks the 153th anniversary of the United States Coast Guard and my good friend Clem Brosier, now with the Public Information Office of the 7th Naval District, provides me with some interesting information concerning Coast Guard activities.

It is proper and fitting that the work of this splendid branch of the service be brought to the attention of the public for new people fully understand and appreciate the amazing service the

LAUGHS

When an Englishman is told a joke, he laughs three times; first, to be polite, second, when the joke is explained, and third, when he catches on.

When a German is told a joke, he laughs twice; first, to be polite, and second, when the joke is explained. He doesn't catch on.

When a Frenchman is told a joke, he laughs once; he catches on immediately. When an American is told a joke he doesn't laugh at all; he's heard it before. — Capper's Weekly.

THAT'S THE SPIRIT

A sailor who had always been plagued with hiccups when under emotional strain began to think he was rid of the malady when he survived boot camp without a flare-up. Then, deep in the South Pacific, his carrier was attacked. Planes zoomed and dived, bombs crashed into the sea. Suddenly it came—the worst case of hiccups he'd ever had. He tried to stifle them, but without success. In desperation he turned to a buddy: "Hey, fellow, I've got the hiccups," he shouted. "Do something to frighten me!" — Coronet.

UNDERGROUND WIRES

Kissimmee has just completed a project of placing telephone wires in underground conduits. This is not only a public convenience but it will in the long run save money for the utility. Power lines ought also for reasons of long-term economy and safety to be put underground. — Orlando Sentinel.

Coast Guard Performs

We in Florida with over a thousand miles of coastline and countless navigable inland waterways should be especially Coast Guard conscious. Aside from combat duty in all theatres of action, the Coast Guard maintains as well all of its regular duties and is even now formulating plans for post war activities that will provide even greater service to all engaged in commercial or pleasure boating.

Right now Florida is experiencing a "boating boom". Registration of motorboats in the 7th Naval District has soared well past the 15,000 mark and is still climbing. More and more folks are acquiring boats and at war's end when restrictions are removed and pleasure is again available, the number in operation will be substantially increased.

It is the aim of the Coast Guard to do everything in its power to serve and safeguard these boat owners and operators. Plans call for intensified air-sea rescue tank unit operating from bases in Miami and St. Petersburg and patrolling almost 300,000 square miles of ocean and inland waterways. Sharp-eyed pilots keep close watch for any vessel in distress and radio the base where fast rescue boats are always ready.

In an emergency, such planes land near the distressed boat and take the survivors aboard, sometimes stacking them like cordwood on the wings and pontoons, then taxiing around until the crash boat arrives.

Skippers who in the past have had trouble navigating in Florida waters can look forward to something better, too. More than 3,000 aids to navigation have been established in the 4th Naval District since the war started. Fire buoy depots are now in operation, channels of the road enforced, anchorages designated and stricter marine inspections maintained, all of which means it is going to be safer to go out in your boat after the war.

Boatmen are going to have to pass examinations before they are issued licenses to operate, and to pass they are going to have to know the rules. Florida waters are going to be as heavily traveled, proportionately, as highways, believes Comdr. Ralph T. Eiland, District Merchant Marine Inspector. "They are going to be as safe or safer than highways if we have anything to do with it," he states.

Since the war Coast Guard fireboats have been provided for many Florida harbors and these will remain after the war. Evidence of the need was shown during the emergency of the Franklin Oil Co. fire in Miami not long ago.

In addition to the air-sea rescue and inspection sections, an expanded captain of the port organization will provide greater protection for small boats in bays, harbors or on the waterways. The number of such vessels added in one year or another in the Miami area alone is almost unbelievable. A faulty engine, a reef where it wasn't supposed to be and in some cases plain carelessness of one kind or another on the part of the operator keep the Coast Guard picket boats stationed at the Royal Palm docks on the go all the time.

A war born activity which will probably be continued on into the peace is the Merchant Marine bearing unit. Trained men are stationed at strategic points all over the world, charged with enforcement of discipline aboard all merchant vessels flying the American flag. In the United States, these units are responsible for such enforcement aboard all ships which enter territorial waters. Such a unit is now operating at Miami.

So when the Coast Guard starts its 150th year of service to America on Saturday, August 4, it will be ready to meet not only Florida's "boating boom" but any other booms or emergencies that might arise and its motto will still be "Semper Paratus" — Always Ready.

Fredrick C. Crawford, chairman of the executive committee of the National Association of Manufacturers, whose members are producing 98 percent of the nation's war output, said that only restrictions such as laws freezing what a worker can do in a giving shop would prevent the industrial brains of America from pushing wideopen the door to a prosperous future for all.

The American Airlines has contracted to fly from 40,000 to 60,000 lbs. of fresh fruits and vegetables from California to Cleveland, Detroit and other midwestern cities, each month according to a story in Pathfinder magazine. The A & P Stores have been expediting in air transported perishables with surprising success. Floridians should get busy if she wants to hold her markets.

The National War Fund is government endorsed, but not government controlled or financed. It operates in full accord with the President's War Relief Control Board, which authorizes two major national campaigns a year for war appeals, the Red Cross in the Spring and the National War Fund in the Fall.

A substantial majority of the public in this country, the organization that the United States should belong to a world organization, according to a national survey just completed by the National Opinion Research Center of the University of Denver.

Service men and women are to the National War Fund for they know the hard and comfort such funds make available to them, both at home and abroad.

Queen Nicotine Is Riding High On Tobacco Markets

ATLANTA.—Whether you have paid more than you should, whether you have created your lunch hour standing in a cigarette line, whether you have a friend who has got rid of his middle-age bulge by stooping under the counter, you ought to be interested in the following news:

They have already started marketing another year's tobacco crop. It's an enormous job. Consider that last year 1,500,215,000 pounds of tobacco were sold by growers in the United States. For this, at an average of 41¢ a pound, they got $615,380,500.

That was the biggest crop on record. The previous record crop was produced in 1938. Last year brought the growers a record return too. The previous high mark was the $510,000,000 they got for the 1945 crop.

Why amid all this plenty, has there been a scarcity of cigarettes? Any cigarette smoker—who never thought much in the past, about the source of his supply—knows now that tobacco goes through an aging process that requires a year or more before it is made into cigarettes.

The record 1944 crop will be going into cigarettes before long, and now is replenishing dwindling stocks. You won't be smoking the tobacco from the current year's sizable crop until 1947 or later.

Production of cigars is being maintained at or near the highest level on record. The common explanation for the scarcity is: (1) more people are smoking; (2) smoking more and (3) keeping a supply ahead. A large supply of cigars is diverted to the Armed Forces. Also, the tobacco companies are not without their manpower problem.

Consumption of chewing tobacco and snuff have also increased since the start of the war, but the increase has been relatively small, compared with the increase in cigarette consumption.

The first tobacco markets of the year to open were in the South Georgia belt. They began the auction season July 24. Opening next, in order, are the South Carolina-North Carolina border belt, the Eastern North Carolina belt, and so on.

Later the burley markets, mainly in Kentucky, opened. Tobacco produced in the Southeastern States—burley and flue-cured—is used mostly in cigarettes. Culling prices are, in effect for all types of tobacco except fire-cured and dark air-cured.

Flue-cured tobacco—produced in Georgia, the Carolinas and Virginia—was one of the first crops to come under the crop control program. Growers consistently to keep it. Crop control followed "sales holidays," back in 1933 because of low prices.

This year, the ceiling on flue-cured tobacco has been raised to a cent a pound, but the OPA and the Department of Agriculture say this is not expected to result in a higher retail price for cigarettes. The ceiling this year is 40¢ a pound for flue-cured tobacco, the kind sold in Georgia—and 44¢ for flue tobacco, marketed in the Carolinas.

Flue-cured tobacco—produced in Georgia, the Carolinas and Virginia—was one of the first crops to come under the crop control program. Growers consistently to keep it. Crop control followed "sales holidays," back in 1933 because of low prices.

This year, the ceiling on flue-cured tobacco has been raised to a cent a pound, but the OPA and the Department of Agriculture say this is not expected to result in a higher retail price for cigarettes. The ceiling this year is 40¢ a pound for flue-cured tobacco, the kind sold in Georgia—and 44¢ for flue tobacco, marketed in the Carolinas.

The application of Southern Telephone Company to install automatic dial telephones at Crestview, Fla., has been granted by the Florida Railroad Commission.
